Incongruence (Lax and Phillips 2011)

A “Democratic Deficit?”

Is 40% a lot of incongruence? (Warshaw and Caughey 2021)

- Policy is a continuum -> this is a function of how we draw the lines
- Do people consider policy “very” incongruent?
- More importantly: is the difference between public opinion and policy enough to change votes/behavior?
  - Even if we assume complete knowledge, faith in the political system, etc?
- Need a good case study policy

The Minimum Wage (Simonovits and Payson 2023)

A choice experiment

Given this choice, which one would you prefer?

Set A	Set B
Permit abortion	Never permit abortion
Legalize marijuana nationwide	Do not legalize marijuana nationwide
Raise the federal minimum wage to $23 per hour	Keep the federal minimum wage at $7.25 per hour
Do not ban assault rifles	Ban assault rifles

Set A

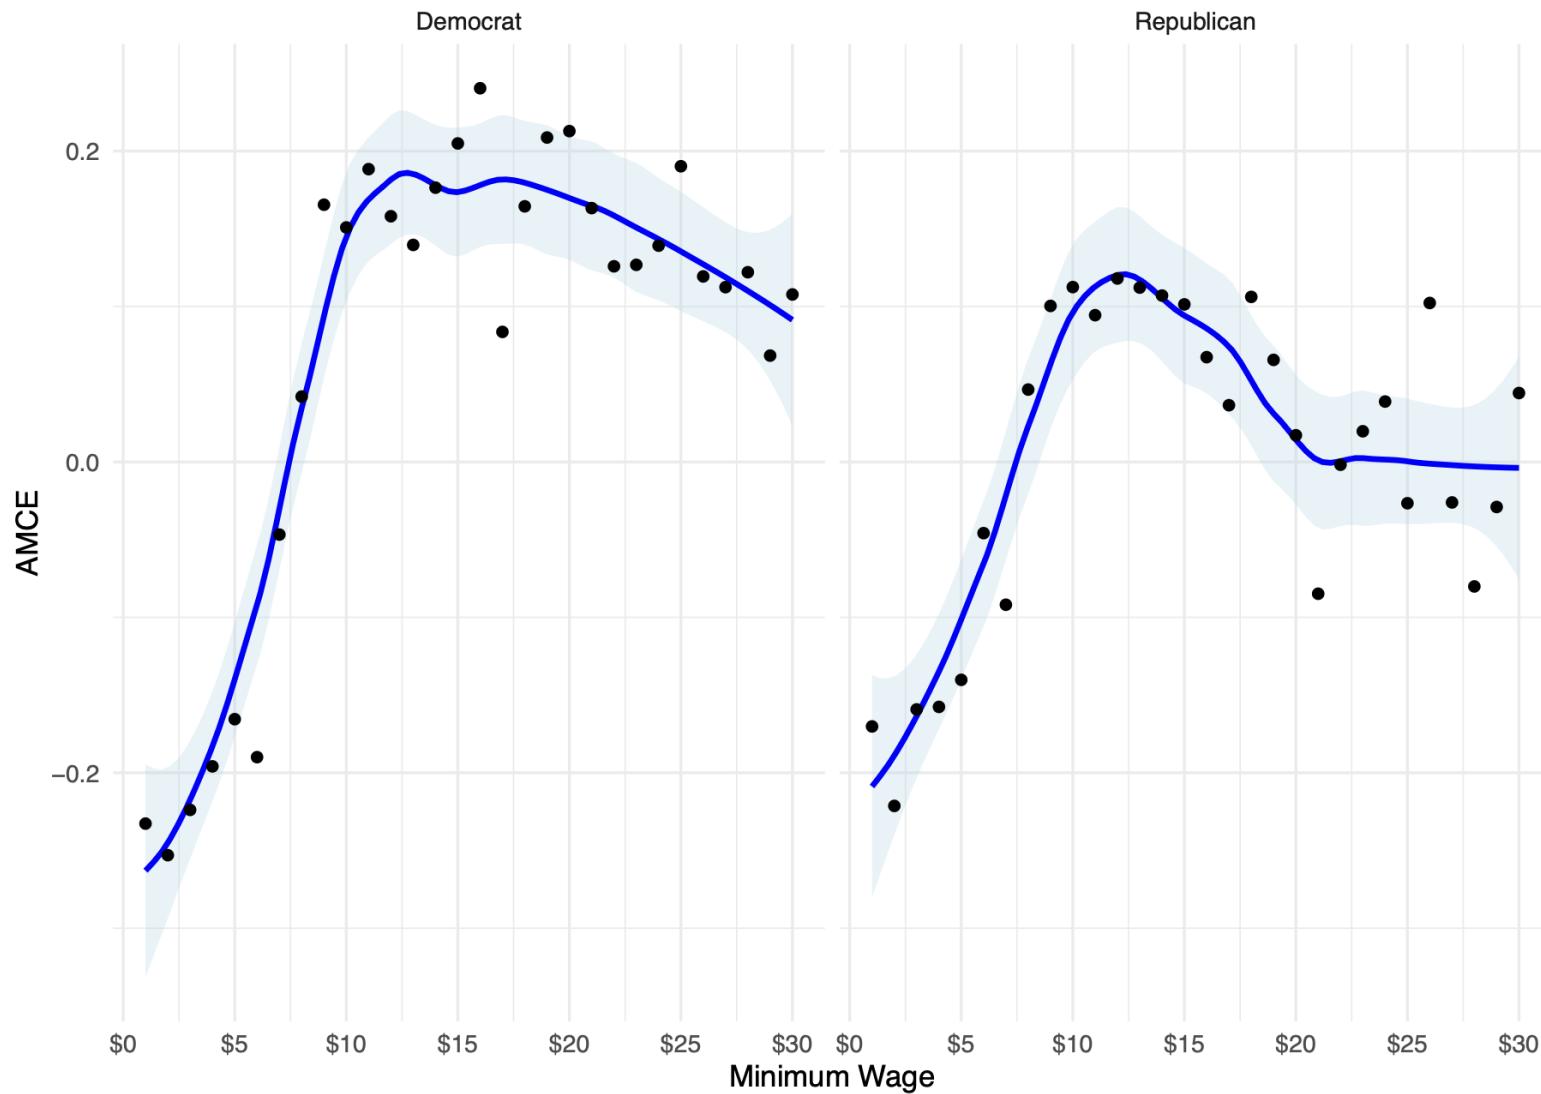

Set B

Average Marginal Component Effect

- Simple linear regression with errors clustered by respondent
- DV: 1 if respondent chooses Set A, 0 if B
- IVs for each attribute:
  - 1 if Set A includes the affirmative version
  - -1 if Set A includes the negative version
  - 0 otherwise

Conclusion

- In the United States, people are close-to-indifferent over large ranges of potential values for the minimum wage
- Incongruence does not necessarily imply that people are very dissatisfied with policy
- Understanding the intensity of preferences in a continuous policy space is fundamental to understanding electoral incentives
